

Case Study

Trinity Hall, University of Cambridge

Trinity Hall is the fifth oldest college in the University of Cambridge, founded in the year 1350 and having nearly 10,000 members around the world.

The Trinity Hall Development Office maintains a stock of high quality imagery for use in print and electronic communications when required. Third Light was introduced to help centralise the image library when the archive was becoming difficult to manage.

“ As the age of digital cameras and the internet began, the stock of photographs available to us grew significantly, and we were struggling to keep track of all the new images and associated copyright details.

We selected Third Light software as it provided a single system for all our needs – particularly the centralising of our photographic files. We are especially impressed by the ease with which we can now search for images quickly using simple keywords. We are also finding the interface for tracking image usage very helpful. Third Light’s excellent team helped us get started; and they are always happy to offer support and advice. ”

Solutions Through Software → Key Functionality

The Trinity Hall image library is hosted by Third Light and is accessed via the high speed network in the college. Commercial storage and hosting, software updates, daily backups and technical support are all included in the Third Light package.

The college plans to open online galleries for alumni to browse photos and buy prints or gift items online, adding a revenue stream to the service, and further expanding the site for the college and its members.

“ Recording our history and heritage is vital.

A college of our age has a rich archive, replenished by each generation of students and staff. The new image library has become a precious resource, allowing us not only to store photographic images, but to also maintain a photographic record of our collections. The Third Light system is really easy to use, belying the powerful software, reliable storage, and technical ability of the Third Light team.

We continue to discover more time-saving benefits of the Third Light system, and surprise ourselves by finding more opportunities to make use of the software.
